

PRESS RELEASE:

Grove Technology Park releases development land to businesses.

Home to 80 businesses on 32 acres, Grove Technology Park is firmly established as one of the principal business parks in southern Oxfordshire. The Park now plans to grow further by selling building plots as their next phase of development.

“We have believed in quietly looking after our tenants at Grove, and are proud to have near 100% occupation on the Park,” says Steve Head, Park Manager. “We are seeing a very active economy in southern Oxfordshire, and with initiatives such as Science Vale UK, the area is being recognised in the global market. We are responding to the market for bespoke facilities, where companies can build what they need. We can offer compact plots as small as a quarter acre or a parkland site as large as twelve acres – and anything in between, according to a client’s requirement.”

Grove Technology Park has also announced that Meeson Williams have been appointed as their retained marketing agents.

“As business confidence continues to return, we have recognised that now is a good time to offer this opportunity to the market,” comments David Williams of Meeson Williams. “This offering will be different to the other main business parks in the area, and adds to the opportunities offered by the region.”

Meeson Williams act as the retained marketing agents for eight business parks across Oxfordshire.
